Richard Greenberg’s The Injured Party takes place for the most part in New York City in 2005. The significance of that year for the play lies in an event that seized the imaginations of New Yorkers for sixteen days in February, when the artist team of Christo and Jeanne-Claude displayed an installation called “The Gates” in Central Park. That artwork serves as a touchstone for the characters in The Injured Party as they search for meaning and fulfillment in a world that has gone pathologically out of joint.

The installation comprised 7,503 gates spaced twelve feet apart along the meandering walkways of the park. The gates were sixteen feet tall and ranged in width from five-and-a-half feet to eighteen feet. Their most distinctive feature was the saffron-colored fabric panels suspended from the top of each gate, hanging to about seven feet above the ground; together their breeze-blown undulations created a network of winding, silky, saffron streams along 23 miles of Central Park walkways.

In a documentary about the creation of “The Gates” (which has been airing recently on HBO), an approving hotdog vendor gives this assessment: “It’s just a piece of art. You look at it and just keep going.” Apprised of that summary, Jeanne-Claude responds, “He describes our work of art better than any art historian can or has done.”

The words “joy and beauty” come up often when Christo and Jeanne-Claude discuss the purpose of their work. They also place great importance on its transitory nature: “The temporary character of our works, our large scale works, is an aesthetic decision on our part…[We wish to endow our work with] the quality of love and tenderness that we human beings have for what does not last.”

In this and other ways “The Gates” resembled theatre in its effect. It required interactivity from those who encountered it: you didn’t just look at the gates, you walked through them. The experience had an important temporal component: as you journeyed along the pathway, each gate framed a different section of the surrounding scenery, changing the way you took in that piece of landscape, that moment in time, that scene, thus creating a kind of evolving environmental narrative. Among the thousands of people who walked through “The Gates,” no two had the same experience. And like any theatrical event, after a brief, transformative life it was gone.

Christo and Jeanne-Claude were both born on June 13, 1935. Their personal partnership began in 1958 when they met in Paris; their artistic collaboration started in 1961. They have lived in New York City since 1964 and began planning “The Gates” in 1979. For many years the city would not grant permission to undertake the installation, but when Michael Bloomberg was elected mayor shortly after the horrors of 9/11, he quickly embraced the Christo project, saying “We have to reassert the daring and the imaginative spirit that really differentiates New York from any other city in the world.”

Although Bloomberg may have seen a certain civic utility in the sweeping work of public art, Christo himself has described “The Gates” as “irrational, irresponsible, without any justification.” But for sixteen days during a snowy, rainy February in New York City, for untold numbers of people, it offered some joy and beauty — and a walk in the park.

DAVID EMMES (Producing Artistic Director) is co-founder of SCR. He has received numerous awards for productions he has directed during his SCR career, including a Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award for the direction of George Bernard Shaw’s The Philanderer. He directed the world premieres of Amy Freed’s Safe in Hell, The Beard of Avon and Freedomland, Thomas Babe’s Great Day in the Morning, Keith Reddin’s Rum and Coke and But Not for Me and Neal Bell’s Cold Sweat; the American premieres of Terry Johnson’s Unsuitable for Adults and Joe Penhall’s Dumb Show; the West Coast premieres of C.P. Taylor’s Good and Harry Kondoleon’s Christmas on Mars; and the Southland premiere of Top Girls (at SCR and the Westwood Playhouse). Other productions include the West Coast premieres of Three Viewings by Jeffrey Hatcher, The Secret Rapture by David Hare and New England by Richard Nelson; and Arcadia by Tom Stoppard, The Importance of Being Earnest by Oscar Wilde, Ayckbourn’s Woman in Mind and You Never Can Tell by George Bernard Shaw, which he restaged for the Singapore Festival of Arts. He has served as a theatre panelist and onsite evaluator for the National Endowment for the Arts, on the Executive Committee of the League of Resident Theatres, and as a panelist for the California Arts Council. After attending Orange Coast College, he received his BA and MA from San Francisco State University, and his PhD in theatre and film from USC.

MARTIN BENSON (Artistic Director), co-founder of SCR with his colleague David Emmes, has directed nearly one third of the plays produced here. He has distinguished himself in the staging of contemporary work, including William Nicholson’s The Retreat from Moscow, the world premiere of Horton Foote’s Getting Frankie Married — and Afterwards and the critically acclaimed California premiere of Nicholson’s Shadowlands. He has won accolades for his direction of five major works by George Bernard Shaw, including the Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle (LADCC) Award-winners Major Barbara, Misalliance and Heartbreak House. Among his numerous world premieres is Margaret Edson’s Pulitzer Prize-winning Wit, which he also directed at Seattle Repertory Theatre and the Alley Theatre in Houston. He has directed American classics including Ab, Wilderness!, A Streetcar Named Desire, A Delicate Balance and A View from the Bridge. Benson has received the LADCC Distinguished Achievement in Directing awards an unparalleled seven times for the three Shaw productions, John Millington Synge’s Playboy of the Western World, Arthur Miller’s The Crucible, Sally Nemeth’s Holy Days and Wit. He also directed the film version of Holy Days using the original SCR cast. Along with Emmes, he accepted SCR’s 1988 Tony Award for Outstanding Resident Professional Theatre and won the 1995 Theatre LA Ovation Award for Lifetime Achievement. Benson received his BA in Theatre from San Francisco State University.
