The Purport of the Skies

Then be it ours with steady mind to clasp
The purport of the skies – the law behind
The wandering courses of the Sun and Moon.

~ Lucretius

In questions of science the authority of a thousand is not worth the humble reasoning of a single individual.

~ Galileo

Science cannot solve the ultimate mystery of Nature. And it is because in the last analysis we ourselves are part of the mystery we are trying to solve.

~ Max Planck, physicist

Each of us inhabits two equally mysterious universes, one outside the mind and the other within it. Since my youth I have tried to understand the relationship between these two realms. Many a night I sat at the telescope till dawn, marveling at the soft pewter glow of the distant galaxies, the glittering gold and silver star fields of the Milky Way, at sun-hugging Mercury, the pearl-white crescent of Venus, or the parchment-sharp rings of Saturn, and wondered what we have to do with all that. I have never shared the sentiment that the enormity of the cosmos need make us feel insignificant. The stars are too involving for that; they stimulate our curiosity, arouse us to reflection, nourish our sense of beauty, and challenge our conception of who we are. We feel connected to them, somehow.

~ Timothy Ferris, The Mind’s Sky

Once astronomers have set up their equipment, they don’t bother to look up and go “Oooo!” anymore. But I feel about astronomy the way I feel about music, instinctive rather than analytical. First there’s the “Oooo!” – the pure emotional enjoyment factor, in music and astronomy, just allowing the beauty of things to wash over you. After that you can get analytical, but if you don’t first allow yourself to be overwhelmed, I think you’ve missed the best part of it.

~ Brian May, amateur astronomer and member of the rock band Queen

In science the man of real genius is the man who invents a new method. The notable discoveries are often made by his successors, who can apply the method with fresh vigour, unimpaired by the previous labour of perfecting it.

~ Bertrand Russell

There prevails among men of letters an opinion that all appearance of science is particularly hateful to women.

~ Samuel Johnson

If one could only go on and on with original work, looking to new stars, variables, classifying spectra and studying their peculiarities and changes, life would be a most beautiful dream; but you come down to its realities when you have to put all that is most interesting to you aside, in order to use most of your available time preparing the work of others for publication. However, whatsoever thou puttest thy hand to, do it well.

~ from the diary of Williamina Fleming, housekeeper turned astronomical “computer”

One of Lauren Gunderson’s primary sources in researching the subject of Silent Sky is a biography of Henrietta Leavitt, Miss Leavitt’s Stars, by George Johnson, published in 2005. The book contextualizes the few known facts of her life within a discussion of how her discovery revolutionized the science of astronomy in the early 20th century:

No diary has been found recording what it was about the stars that moved her. One of history’s small players, her story has been allowed to slip through the cracks … and it is only upon her death that we find, in an obituary written by her senior colleague, Solon Bailey, testimony to what she might have been like as a woman: “Miss Leavitt inherited, in a somewhat chastened form, the stern virtues of her puritan ancestors. She took life seriously. Her sense of duty, justice and loyalty was strong. For light amusements she appeared to care little. She was a devoted member of her intimate family circle, unselfishly considerate in her friendships, steadfastly loyal to her principles, and deeply conscientious and sincere in her attachment to her religion and church. She had the happy faculty of appreciating all that was worthy and lovable in others, and was possessed of a nature so full of sunshine that, to her, all of life became beautiful and full of meaning.” Although the obituary didn’t say so, she was also deaf, although apparently not from birth… For her new calling, eyes were more important than ears, and perhaps deafness was an occupational advantage in a job requiring such intense powers of concentration.
An Astronomical Glossary

Cepheids
Cepheid Variables are very large, luminous, yellow stars. They change in magnitude (brightness) regularly, with periods of 1 to 70 days between peaks. The stars are called Cepheids after the first star of this type to be discovered, Delta Cephei, a bright star in the constellation of Cepheus.

Light Year
The distance traveled by light in one year, equal to about 6 trillion miles.

Magellanic Clouds
Known to astronomers since the tenth century, the Large Magellanic Cloud and its neighboring Small Magellanic Cloud are irregular dwarf galaxies visible in the southern hemisphere. They orbit our own Milky Way galaxy, whose gravitational force has contributed to their distorted shape and cloudy appearance.

Declination and Right Ascension
Similar to geographic latitude and longitude, but projected onto the celestial sphere: Declination is expressed in degrees north or south of the celestial equator, and right ascension measures an angle that increases toward the east as measured from a zero point (the place in the sky where the Sun crosses the celestial equator at the March equinox).

Draper Catalogue
Its first edition published in 1890, the Draper Catalogue of Stellar Spectra contained spectroscopic classifications for 10,351 stars. Most of the classification was done by Williamina Fleming at the Harvard Observatory. The catalogue is named after Henry Draper, an American doctor and amateur astronomer who pioneered the field of astrophotography.

Great Refractor Telescope
A 15-inch telescope installed at Cambridge in 1847. For 20 years it was the largest telescope in the United States, the most significant American astronomical instrument and equal to the finest in the world. It formed the nucleus for development of the Harvard College Observatory.

Period-Luminosity Relation
The relationship between a variable star’s luminosity (the total amount of radiation it gives off in one second) and the period of its pulsation (the length of time between successive peaks in its brightness). In Cepheids this relationship is well defined, a discovery made by Henrietta Leavitt.

Stellar Photometry
The branch of astronomy that deals with the accurate measurement of the brightness, color and temperature of stars and the changes in their brightness over time.

Spectral Class
One of seven classes designated by the letters O, B, A, F, G, K and M; the hottest stars (O and B) are blue-white in color, while the coolest (M) are red. Each of the letter classes has subdivisions indicated by numerals 0 through 9.
