In the early summer of 2016, residents of Rio de Janeiro, host city of the then-upcoming Olympic Games, braced themselves for disruptions to all aspects of their daily lives in the months ahead. One thing, however, would remain essentially unchanged during the international sporting event: the city’s primetime television schedule. Instead of broadcasting the games on weeknights, Rede Globo, Brazil’s premier television network, promised to air its regularly scheduled telenovelas throughout August. After all, the nighttime programs are simply too popular to put on hiatus. Without telenovelas “the country would stop,” Monica Albuquerque, Globo’s head of artistic development, told The New York Times in June 2016. “It’s cultural. It’s part of life. I can’t imagine Brazil without its soaps.”

In this regard, Brazil is no exception to the rest of Latin America, where telenovelas are, by far, the leading form of entertainment. Each night, millions of viewers across Mexico, Central and South America, Cuba, Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic tune in to watch these serial dramas. While the style and content of telenovelas differ based upon their country of origin, the genre is defined by its approach to storytelling, which is rooted in the conventions of 19th-century melodramatic literature and theatre. Telenovelas have fast-moving plots that rely on an abundance of twists and turns; they draw a clear line between the moral and the immoral; and their characters experience grand, unrestrained emotions—like love, lust, betrayal and jealousy—that appeal to the emotions of an audience.

The telenovela’s more modern ancestor, however, is the radio soap opera that American companies like Colgate-Palmolive and Procter & Gamble brought to pre-Castro Cuba in the late 1930s. Over the decade that followed, radionovelas spread across Latin America and then, like the radio soaps in the United States, jumped to the small screen in the 1950s.

But despite their shared lineage, telenovelas and U.S. soap operas have evolved into distinct genres in both form and appeal. Soap operas can run for decades, while telenovelas usually span only 180-200 episodes (known as “chapters”). This allows telenovelas to have a clear story arc and a definitive ending, while soap operas often eschew narrative closure—by introducing a variety of plots and subplots—to serve their longevity. Telenovelas are primetime television: they appeal to a broad audience and the performers are national stars. Soap operas are daytime television: they have a smaller, more specific demographic, and the actors don’t have the star caliber of their primetime or film counterparts.

Their popularity and primetime status make telenovelas highly profitable. Most air five or six nights a week, a boon for local and national advertisers. They are lucrative exports, as well, a trend that began in the 1970s and has grown steadily. Today, countries in Latin America export their programs to nations across the globe, including the U.S., Great Britain, Spain, France, China, Russia and Serbia. Networks also remake foreign telenovelas for their national audiences. Colombia’s “Yo Soy Betty, la Fea,” for example, first aired in 1999 and has since inspired 17 different adaptations.

“La Reina del Sur” (“The Queen of the South”), produced by the American Telemundo network, in association with Spain’s Antena 3 and Colombia’s RTI Producciones, premiered in 2011 and was enormously popular. During its run, it dominated the 10 p.m. time slot, often beating out English-language programming on other major U.S. networks. “La Reina” starred Kate del Castillo as Teresa Mendoza, a woman who flees Mexico after her boyfriend is killed and she goes on to become a powerful drug trafficker in Spain. The telenovela was based upon Spanish author Arturo Pérez-Reverte’s novel of the same name.

“Liberdade, Liberdade” (“Freedom, Freedom”) is a fictional account of life in Brazil during and after the Minas Conspiracy of 1789, an independence movement that ultimately failed. The telenovela aired on Rede Globo from April to August 2016 and, like many of Brazil’s recent serials, spoke to the country’s current political turmoil.
including the American comedy-drama “Ugly Betty.” In recent years, the telenovela’s influence on American primetime television has only increased. The sitcoms “Jane the Virgin” and “Devious Maids” are both loose adaptations of telenovelas from Venezuela and Mexico, respectively. And in 2016, the USA Network premiered “Queen of the South,” an adaptation of “La Reina del Sur,” a popular series produced by Telemundo, the U.S. Spanish-language network.

But the international appeal of telenovelas should not overshadow their national significance. Although the serial dramas might have started as romantic diversions, their identity has evolved. Today, many set their personal stories against a political backdrop; they aim to reflect the current experience of their nations’ citizens and, by doing so, encourage change within their countries. Like their swift plots, they keep things moving forward. And so it’s no surprise that the telenovela—with its flexible aesthetic, but unmistakable identity—remains impressively popular across Latin America.

“Yo Soy Betty, la Fea” (“I Am Betty, the Ugly One”) tells the story of Betty, a bright woman whose unattractive appearance has held her back professionally. But once Betty secures a job as a secretary at a fashion company, she quickly proves to her boss that she’s indispensable—and eventually captures his heart. “Betty, la Fea” first aired on Colombia’s RCN Televisión from October 1999 to May 2001 and has become one of Latin America’s most famous telenovelas.

“Velho Chico” (“Old Frank”) is a Brazilian telenovela that speaks to the country’s contemporary politics. The multigenerational saga—set in both the 1960s and present day—chronicles life on a family-owned cotton plantation near the São Francisco River (known as Velho Chico among locals) and touches on a variety of topics, including social class and environmental abuse. “Velho Chico” premiered in March 2016 and currently occupies Rede Globo’s 9:15 p.m. time slot on Mondays through Saturdays.
What was your inspiration behind writing Destiny of Desire?

So often, when a Latino dramatist writes a serious play, the jargon critics use to describe certain dramatic moments is “telenovela.” That always seems a way of dismissing high-caliber work. Destiny of Desire is an act of rebellion, it is an act of heritage, an act of joy in trying to write the best telenovela I could. Most telenovela’s last six months to a year. Could I pack a year’s worth of story into two hours? Plus, add live music and original songs? I wanted to take something that’s been created for television and transport it into a wildly theatrical experience on stage. And also give work to all these talented Latino theatre artists that don’t get to be on stage as often as they should. Destiny of Desire is an aesthetic, artistic and political endeavor. It also was a challenge to myself and to others on every level—and it’s been one of the most joyful experiences writing this play.

How did the play start for you? Was it a character, or a particular scene, or the setting?

I had the idea four years ago and I must have started seven different versions of the play, but none of them grabbed traction. The stakes weren’t high enough. It wasn’t juicy enough. And then I woke up in the middle of the night and realized—this is Brechtian! It needed to be both Aristotelian theatre and Brechtian theatre. The moment I had the idea that it was a theatre troupe putting on a telenovela as if it was Greek drama, suddenly the whole thing opened up for me. When I found the dramaturgical language of the play, that allowed the plot to come soaring in.

What attracts you to telenovelas?

What I find interesting about telenovelas is the ambivalence you feel at first. But you watch one scene and before you know it, you’re hooked. As you stay longer you find yourself pulled in. Destiny plays with that energy. It starts out as funny, heightened situations, but by the end you care deeply about the fate of these characters.

Telenovelas are very sneaky because they’re not cynical. They approach life with these strong heartfelt emotions. People equate them to soap operas, but that’s not really correct. They’re more like mini-series. They have a beginning, a middle and an end. You know there will be resolution. It might not be the resolution you want but these are not families you’re going to be living with for 30 years. In six months, the telenovela will be over, in one year the telenovela will be over. And while it’s on—if it’s a good one—you know not to call people because everyone’s watching it.

Why was it important to you to have an all Latino cast?
It was important because it’s something that happens so rarely in the theatre. American audiences will see something with a very different aesthetic and plot than most of the other plays that are being offered. It will feel different and sound different. And it’s so nice to get something exciting and new. It’s playing with every expectation—from the casting, to the storytelling, to the music. I hope people will come and be deeply entertained, but also understand that there are so many messages about gender, class and race that are being said at the same time.

Did you always hear live music in the writing?
Always. In telenovelas, music is really important. There’s always a song that’s a love song. Music is really the 12th character in the play. It helps ratchet up the tension, it helps bring the subtext to the foreground. Having a live grand piano adds a classical quality—this contemporary story has roots in classical storytelling.

What does destiny mean to you?
Destiny is different than fate. Destiny is what your life can be if you realize your potential, if you believe in your potential and you go for it. Destiny is not something that happens to you. It’s something you have to strive for. Unlike fate, which is something that’s sealed and locked, destiny is fluid and can evolve. Who you were and who you can become is within your grasp but it also requires some kind of faith in the community.

Robert Barry Fleming (Choreography) is the associate artistic director at Cleveland Play House. Formerly the director of artistic programming at Arena Stage, he has worked as a director, choreographer and actor in many of the leading resident theatres across the country (including The Public Theater, Mark Taper Forum, Guthrie Theater, La Jolla Playhouse and The Old Globe). His work has been represented on Broadway (Stand-Up Tragedy, Ragtime) and in television and film, including the Oscar-winner, L.A. Confidential. He was an associate producer for the NYC revival of Tennessee Williams’ The Two Character Play starring Amanda Plummer and Brad Dourif. He served as associate professor and chair of the Theatre Arts and Performance Studies Department at the University of San Diego. He also has taught in The Old Globe/University of San Diego Graduate Acting MFA Program. Fleming was a Stage Directors and Choreographers Foundation Charles Abbott Directing Fellow, San Diego Critics Circle Craig Noel Award winner, is a two-time honoree of the Bay Area Critics Circle Award for Outstanding Direction of a Musical and is a Helen Hayes Award nominee for his work on Karen Zacarias’ Destiny of Desire at Arena Stage.

Bree Sherry (Stage Manager) has previously worked off-Broadway on These Paper Bullets! (Atlantic Theater Company), Fringe Festival 2010, Magic Mouth (Kraine Theatre) and New York productions of American Gypsy (Abingdon Theatre with LXP Productions) and My Sweet Charlie. Her regional theatre credits include These Paper Bullets! (The Geffen Playhouse); Kiss Me Kate (Pasadena Playhouse); Princess & Pirates, A Sing-a-long Concert (Kirk Douglas Theatre with Lythgoe Family Panto), The Reduced History of Comedy Abridged, Talley’s Folly, Equally Divided, Stella & Lou, Devil’s Music and Mrs. Mannerly (Merrimack Repertory Theatre); Nutcracker and The Sun Also Rises (2012 The Washington Ballet); Bad Jews, The Motherf*cker with the Hat (Studio Theatre); A Christmas Carol (2011), A Doll House, Dial “M” for Murder, Masquerade, Steel Magnolias and The Sunset Limited (Triad Stage); and The Servant of Two Masters and Rough Crossing (Yale Repertory Theatre). She also is the Operations Manager for the International Festival of Arts and Ideas, touring stage manager with the Reduced Shakespeare Company and has served as the production manager for UC Santa Barbara’s theatre and dance departments. She has worked on the Latin Grammy Awards and the Drama Desk Awards. She earned her BA in technical production and design from Elon University and her MFA in stage management from Yale University, School of Drama.

Lilly Deerwater (Assistant Stage Manager) is excited to return to South Coast Repertory, where she previously worked on Tartuffe, Reunion, Trudy & Max in Love and 4000 Miles. Her regional credits include Design for Living, Benefactors, Same Time Next Year and Lion in Winter (Berkshire Theatre Group).

Marc Masterson (Artistic Director) is in his sixth season with SCR. Under his leadership, SCR has expanded community initiatives and world premieres including CrossRoads commissions with plays Vietgone and Orange and the Dialogos project in Santa Ana. In recent years, SCR productions have transferred to some of the leading theatres in the country including Manhattan Theatre Club, Oregon Shakespeare Festival, Berkeley Repertory Theatre and The Shakespeare Theatre. His recent directing credits include All the Way, Going to a Place where you Already Are, Zealot, Death of a Salesman, Eurydice and Elemeno Pea at SCR, As You Like It for the Houston Shakespeare Festival, The Kite Runner at Actors Theatre of Louisville and the Cleveland Play House. He served for 11 years as artistic director of Actors Theatre of Louisville and produced the Humana Festival of New American Plays, where he produced more than 100 world premieres, expanded audiences and the repertoire, deepened arts education programs and spearheaded numer-

Honorary Producers

SANDY SEGERTROM DANIELS is a lifelong and passionate supporter of the arts. Having enjoyed her debut involvement last season as an individual Honorary Producer of Amadeus, Sandy is thrilled to help underwrite two productions this season, starting with Destiny of Desire and continuing in January with Moby Dick. Sandy has been a First Nights subscriber since the 1980s, a Platinum Circle donor since 2001 and a frequent Gala underwriter, including the landmark 50th Season Gala. Over the past three seasons, as a member of The Playwrights Circle, she has helped underwrite three world-premiere productions featured in the Pacific Playwrights Festival. She is a member of the Segerstrom family—philanthropic leaders in Orange County, whose gift of land in the 1970s made it possible for SCR to relocate and build on its present site.

SOCORRO AND ERNESTO VASQUEZ first became involved in the early 1990s as underwriters of Una Noche de Teatro, supporting the Hispanic Playwrights Project. Since then, they've been actively involved in every aspect of the theatre. Socorro served on the SCR Board of Trustees from 1996 through 2005—a very active year, during which she chaired both the Platinum Circle and the Gala Ball, Encantar... As if by Magic. She subsequently was elected an Emeritus trustee in recognition of her distinguished service. She and Ernesto were donors to the Next Stage Campaign and are major annual Gala underwriters and members of Platinum Circle. Last season, Socorro chaired the successful 2015 Gala, Encore! Over the summer, Ernesto’s architectural firm, SVA Architects, provided invaluable pro bono expertise to help with the design and installation of the interior and exterior handrails, which have been a welcome addition for our playgoers. This is the couple’s third time to serve as Honorary Producers; previously they helped underwrite Culture Clash in America and La Posada Mágica. Socorro said “Es nuestro placer—It is our privilege and honor to belong to the SCR family for all these years. It never ceases to amaze us of the talent and energy that this theatre captures to produce such wonderful, innovative and award-winning storytelling on our beloved stages. It is not only our pleasure, but a self-fulfilling duty to help nourish the Hispanic stories that capture our imagination and transport us to a world beyond our familiar realm.”

It’s never too late to shake things up
